Boutique Law Firm Handles UDRP Proceedings for startups

Houston, TX - August 21, 2024 - A Uniform Domain Name Dispute Resolution Policy (UDRP) is a process used to resolve disputes over domain names, often involving claims of cybersquatting, where a domain name may infringe on trademarks. If you find yourself on the receiving end of a UDRP complaint or a cybersquatting claim, it's crucial to understand your rights and options. As the domain name holder, you have the opportunity to defend your registration by submitting evidence and arguments that demonstrate your legitimate interest in the domain name and that it was not registered in bad faith.

Lloyd & Mousilli, a boutique law firm specializing in IP litigation, can provide expert guidance in navigating this complex process. Our experienced IP team will counsel you through each step, from preparing a strong defense to presenting your case before the arbitration panel. With our in-depth knowledge of UDRP proceedings and a commitment to protecting your online assets, we ensure that your interests are vigorously defended.
